

How To Touch A Color

C. Room Maxwell

(c) 2021

How To Touch A Color

If you want to touch a color in the beautiful world,

just use your fingers and put them on the brightest part of it.

This much is true,
you only need to know two things to touch a color.

A black and white picture
A still-life canvas
A line drawing
A darkening sky
Or a misty morning
A lilac bud
A butterfly
A red rose
A yellow tulip
A violet

How to touch a color
Close your eyes
Listen to the silence
Find that color in your mind

Black is in the background
White is in the foreground
Blue is the sky
Gray is the fog

And when you find them
Open your eyes
Feel the color
And step in

The colors are so vibrant, think how it feels to touch the violet with your fingertips.

Or the way the yellow jumps out of your hands like a petal from an iris.

Or how the blue you're painting is so light and cool on your fingertips.

Think about how it would feel to touch the colors.

Look at the red in the apple and stop thinking about what you know It is sweet and full and you can taste it too just pick it up and touch it

How to touch a color. she said
Lean closer and let me feel your grip

The red of my hair that you thought so unique
Is just the light that's reflecting off of my skin
The blue of your eyes that I thought so intense I can't stare at for too long without getting a twitch
The green of my shirt that's just a shade too bright Is just the paint on a picture in a frame
The yellow of my skin that you thought too pale
Is just the shadow of the moon on the ground

The colors that you think are so vibrant That you think are so alive
Are just the colors that have always existed

What would I need to do To touch the red you are Would I need a pool of paint Or would I need a brush
Or would I need a white coat
To be in my close proximity

The first time I heard you I wondered, how to touch a color as if it was an object
I could feel behind the canvas
I had to touch you with my fingers across the canvas to feel your warmth
that was your color

I know how to touch the color of your hair
I know how to hold your hands in mine
And reach for your lips in the dark
I know how to touch the color of your skin Underneath the clothes
How to find the pulse and the rhythm
And taste your salty blood
I know how to touch the color of your eyes
How to see you in the sky
I can see your whole life in there
How to love you
I know how to touch you

How to touch a color without letting the hue escape through the cracks in your fingers or through the cracks in your lips?

Simple.
just touch the color
but not too much until all of the difference between you and that color is gone.

About C. Room Maxwell

Room is found in the northern climes of Wellesley, Massachusetts, spending time reading, writing, and hibernating. A poetic autodidact, Room finds inspiration primarily in the romantic poets and Victorian novelists, but takes insight from poetry and prose wherever it may be found, to inform an idiosyncratic poetic style.